TODAY I tried to come home by public transport from Circular Quay to Potts Point, the most densely populated suburb in NSW.

A month ago, before the transport boffins mangled our services (324, 325) and removed three other services, this direct trip took 25 minutes, today it involved two trains and took one hour from the Quay to Kings Cross Station, a distance of just 2.5km.

Mr Baird, you promised to tweak the system if it wasn't workable. Well here's your chance: give the elderly residents, tourists, city workers and public transport patrons of the inner east our buses back to Circular Quay.

It's time to put the "public" back in transport. CAROLE FERRIER, Rushcutters Bay
